- (b) While locally available building materials may be utilised to the maximum possible extent, the nature of construction and the choice of specifications should be such that the roof of the house should last not less than 20 years, with reasonable maintenance and repairs by the occupants. If the walls are built with non-durable materials, the roof should be carried independently on posts or pillars of durable constructions.

8. Wherever possible, group housing on cooperative basis or otherwise should be encouraged. While encouraging construction of housing colonies it should be ensured that there is no segregation of harijans. Therefore 10 to 15% of sites should be reserved to non-scheduled castes.

9. Housing programmes should be linked up with the occupational life of the beneficiaries in rural areas so that there is no desertion of the housing colony in search of employment by the rural people.

10. The construction of the house shall have to be completed by the beneficiary within the period of eighteen months from the date of sanctioning the first instalment of subsidy. The time limit may be extended in hardship cases by Director of Social Welfare for which an application will be made by the beneficiaries through the concerned Block Development Officer.
